Let any soldier boy who was abroad or in camp at home understand that the adoption of the covenant for the league of nations as insisted upon by president Wilson means that he will be subject to draft to go abroad to fight for any other country and that boy will let you know quickly his opposition to the league. Since president Wilson insists upon the acceptance of the league covenant just as he presented it to the senate and declares that article ten is the vital feature of the covenant, how can it be understood any other way than that the constitution of the United States will be annulled in all particulars in which it conflicts with the covenant and that the power to draft soldiers in this country to send abroad anywhere it is desired by the "high commission," they shall go. The fact that our returned boys are apparently indifferent, seem to wear a cynical or stolid expression or unmistakably resent any suggestion that they re-enlist or may be subject to draft when approached on the subject, ought to convey the idea that they are anything but harmonious with the provisions of the covenant. Certainly they or but few of them, have read and made a study of its provisions, but there is scarcely one of them into whom has not been infused the fact that the adoption of the covenant as written by the president, Lloyd George and Clemenceau means that he may be again forced into ranks and have to fight for the interests of some other country than his own. Why the effort to conceal from the public at least an understandable part of the obligations of the United States if the senate ratifies the covenant without a reservation, amendment or interpretation which our government will insist upon being accepted by other countries to the compact or, refusing, absolve us from further connection with the league. President Wilson admits that under article ten an army sufficient to enforce the provisions of the league is absolutely necessary and that we must supply our quota of men, whatever the number may be and for so long as it requires their services to establish peace on earth but silent as to the good will among men conquered and their conquerors. Is it not true that if the covenant is adopted Mexico will have a freer hand and Japan the right to purchase Lower California and the United States be powerless to interfere until the "high commission," the council of nations and league representatives pass upon our right to resent and is it not also true that England would be more than pleased over such a situation for us? The veiled interest of Britain is seen dimly thru the covenant film but gradually the machine which has been spinning the league ribbon in becoming rickety in its bearings and the operators unable to make an enticing picture of a democratized world.

The State of Missouri, to all of the above named defendants, greetings:

Plaintiffs further state that the above specifically named defendants are non-residents of the State of Missouri, and cannot be served with process in this state.

It is not a question of president Wilson or Senator Reed nor is it a question of democracy or republicanism, the attitude of any citizen of the United States towards the presidents proposed covenant for the League of Nations he assisted prominently in writing is that individuals right and privilege as an American whether he be for or against going into partnership with England, France, Japan and Italy have not signed the covenant and may never do so, but what is it to America if they do not, so long as America is clear of an entangling alliance?

Have you struck yet? If not, organize yourself immediately and quit work at once. In these days, with an approaching millennium apparent on all sides, no man really ought to have less than $50,000 a year, four automobiles, a summer abroad each year, and a winter vacation thrown in. An hour a day at say $100 an hour, with pay and a half for overtime, is all any citizen ought to work under "the new order." Walk out, anyhow. If everybody can be induced to quit work things will prosper marvelously. and you with them.
